Govt vows to avoid 'shameful repeat of robodebt'

Karen Barlow, Miriam Webber

THE Albanese government insists it is acting to ensure nothing like the "shameful" robodebt scandal ever happens again, accepting 49 of the recommendations made by the robodebt royal commission in full, and agreeing to seven more in principle.

Though it accepted 56 recommendations in some form, it did not back a closing observation from commissioner Catherine Holmes calling for increased transparency around Cabinet documents.

Commissioner Holmes argued a section of the Freedom of Information Act should be repealed, to scrap a guarantee of confidentiality for cabinet documents. A justifiable reason should be given for withholding such information, the royal commission report states.

But the government maintained that cabinet documents should be confidential so that public servants and ministers can express their "frank and fearless advice" and views. Public Service Minister Katy Gallagher placed ultimate responsibility for the unlawful scheme on former Coalition ministers, but recognised the role of the federal public service in rolling out the scheme.

"There's no doubt that the illegal robodebt scheme was a shameful chapter in public administration in Australia," Senator Gallagher said.

"What we saw in terms of the former government's approach to the public service was one of a lack of respect and a lack of value of that institution."

Greens failed to tell speaker about Davis

Jasper Lindell

THE ACT Greens failed to immediately notify the Legislative Assembly's speaker about allegations of sexual misconduct by one of its members despite a clear policy requirement to do so.

In the wake of Johnathan Davis's resignation over allegations he had sex with a 15 year old and an improper, but not illegal, relationship with a 17 year old, Labor and the Greens have exchanged a war of words over the minor coalition partner's handling of the matter.

Emma Davidson, a Greens minister, was also revealed to have known about "rumours" of Mr Davis' behaviour a week before Greens leader Shane Rattenbury.

Mr Rattenbury took aim at the Labor party, calling a statement from Deputy Chief Minister Yvette Berry expressing concern in the Greens' handling of the allegations "highly inappropriate".

Mr Rattenbury, who is also

Attorney-General, defended the time it took for complaints to be referred to police, saying the party needed to be sure it was not simply "acting on what could be an untrue rumour".

"I think one needs to look at the Labor party's statement last night and question the Labor party's integrity on this matter. For them to try and create a political advantage out of the most difficult and sensitive issue my party has ever faced reflects very poorly," he said.

Speaker Joy Burch on Monday said she found out about the allegations made against Mr Davis, who subsequently resigned late on Sunday night, by reading The Canberra Times.

Opposition Leader Elizabeth Lee asked Mr Rattenbury whether the party had referred the complaint to Ms Burch.

TIMES PAST

November 14, 1993

In 2023 it would be hard to imagine rooms full of passive smoke from cigarettes and cigars while trying to eat lunch or dinner. But this was a reality when The Canberra Times reported on this day in 1993, that the health minister at the time was pushing to have non-smoking laws introduced in restaurants and cafes. The ACT health minister, Wayne Berry, was going to be pressing ahead with his proposed legislation for smoke free restaurants, despite attacks from the Australian Hotels Association. Mr Berry had suggested legislation which would ban smoking in all restaurants and cafes whose primary business was serving food. This would include those in clubs and hotels. The AHA had made repeated claims such a ban would hit both youth employment and revenue from heavy smoking tourists. Mr Berry said: "The AHA will use any tactic in their campaign to continue the consumption of tobacco. They ought to be joining in the campaign to reduce tobacco consumption rather than campaigning against change." Mr Berry said 70 per cent of people did not smoke and even a lot of smokers wanted no smoking in restaurants. Far from harming the hospitality trade, non-smoking restaurants would be likely to increase patronage, he said. Mr Berry said the AHA's claim that the case against passive smoking was unproven flew in the face of a mountain of scientific evidence to the contrary. 'Deliberate lies' told after 'staged' crash

Tim Piccione

A WOMAN gave multiple accounts of an alleged "staged" car crash that "don't add up or make a lot of sense", a court has heard.

"The devil is often in the detail," prosecutor Morgan Howe told an ACT Supreme Court jury on Monday.

Lina Faris and husband Rabea Fares both deny numerous charges, including attempting to, by deception, dishonestly obtain a financial advantage from someone else.

The married couple are accused of taking part in a staged car crash on Duffy's Eucumbene Drive in February 2020 in order to make multiple allegedly fraudulent insurance claims.

Following the crash, the pair filed claims for the black Audi SUV Faris was driving on the day and third party claims for injuries they both suffered.

The Audi was insured for $55,000.

In his closing address, on the trial's fifth day, Mr Howe said Faris gave "various versions" of the crash to authorities and the woman was unable to stick to one account when probed.

"Telling deliberate lies to try and arouse as little suspicion about the circumstances of the collision," Mr Howe said.

The differing versions, the prosecutor said, included telling police and insurers the Audi was travelling in two different directions, and that she did or did not speak to a woman who falsely claimed to have been driving the BMW.

Mr Howe said Faris also lied about driving at 60kmh in the middle of the road when she was hit, after police evidence indicated the car had been stationary and parked on the side of the road on impact.

"What role did she actually play?" Faris' barrister, Dean Ager, asked the jury during his closing address.

Mr Ager said there was no evidence his client knew Adam Hasan Kilani, the man who was driving the BMW, and that it was plausible Fares' whiplash injuries had affected her ability to recount details.

The court heard Fares, the Audi's passenger, and Kilani knew each other through work.

Kilani previously pleaded guilty to attempting to, by deception, obtain a financial advantage from someone else and dangerous driving.

Mr Ager also said there was no evidence Faris knew of "any plan" for Kilani to crash into her car or that she knew the man would then make his own insurance claims.

Both she and Fares are facing charges of being "knowingly concerned" with Kilani's fraudulent claim.

Barrister Todd Pickering, representing Fares, told jurors the accused man had no financial motivation to stage the crash.

"He's doing quite well, financially," the barrister said, noting there was no evidence submitted of Fares being in financial distress. "It doesn't make any sense."

Mr Pickering conceded that his client had been in phone contact with Kilani three-and-a-half hours, being "quite some time", before the accident.

The barrister said there was no evidence of further communication between the two men on the day in question or in following days. "That's not consistent with some kind of staged accident," Mr Pickering said.

"You might think if they were really in cahoots, there might have been some communication later that evening, the next day, the next week."

Fares, who was knocked unconscious during the crash, told authorities he did not recall any details about the incident.

The jury is set to retire for deliberations on Tuesday.

ACT private school car park dispute in tribunal

Sarah Lansdown

A LONG-RUNNING dispute over a private school car park that was installed without development approval is being heard in the ACT Civil and Administrative Tribunal.

The tribunal heard on Monday Brindabella Christian College received advice in 2012 that they would need to submit a development application to upgrade the gravel car park between the Lyneham campus and public oval.

Plans to redevelop the land into a sports facility in 2015 were met with strong community opposition.

In February 2016, the school attempted to purchase the land, which it was and still is using under a sublease from the ACT government.

The school went ahead with sealing the car park later in 2016 without purchasing the land or submitting a development application.

The Lyneham Community Association appealed a decision by the ACT Planning and Land Authority to refuse to make a controlled activity order relating to the car park. Brindabella Christian College has since joined as a party to the tribunal proceedings.

The association has argued the car park poses safety risks to pedestrians, including children walking to Lyneham Primary School.

The ACT government said removing the 100-space car park would create safety problems and congestion in nearby streets.

However, keeping the car park in the current place would require a change to zoning in the territory plan.

Senior member Michael Orlov said there could be alternatives to the car park, such as the school applying to buy the land or negotiating with Saint Ninian's Uniting Church to use their car park.

"It seems to me there are lots of alternatives potentially," Mr Orlov said.

And the issue that the tribunal will require assistance with is where the public interest lies.

School maintenance manager Craig O'Mara told the tribunal the school board chair Greg Zwaigenberg said the school owned the land and instructed him to organise for the car park to be sealed in 2016.

Public hearings are expected to continue on November 14 and 15.

CORRECTION

An opinion piece published on November 11 referred to Shell paying zero dollars in corporate tax, based on the latest Corporate Tax Transparency report by the ATO. The ATO has since corrected those figures to reflect that Shell Energy Holdings Australia Limited paid $117,507,887 on revenue of $8.970m, not $0 as was originally published by the ATO.

PMs aplenty, but what about the others?

Sally Pryor

HE MAY have been prime minister for just eight days, but Francis Forde still gets a special plaque in the Canberra suburb named after him.

Same goes for Arthur Fadden - famously lasting 40 days and 40 nights in office - and Earle Page, who was just 20 days in the top job.

But they, along with 14 other former prime ministers, have the honour of special signage in the Canberra suburbs named after them.

Hardly any of the 110-odd other suburbs have any similar kudos, despite the many fascinating stories that go with the name.

And three former ACT chief ministers think it's time this changed.

Kate Carnell, Gary Humphries and Jon Stanhope, all agree that there's no reason why all of Canberra's suburbs shouldn't have a sign explaining where their name comes from.

The three former leaders met on Monday morning at a busy roundabout at the intersection of Fadden, Gilmore, Chisholm and Macarthur - only one of which gets the special sign.

And their political differences well and truly took the backseat as all three wondered why, during their respective times in office, they had never considered the inequity of special signage only for prime ministers.

The meeting was instigated by Canberra lawyer Andrew Fraser, a former chief of staff at The Canberra Times and son of Jim Fraser, the lone parliamentary representative for the ACT from 1951 to 1970.

Mr Fraser senior, who died in 1970, was honoured with a suburb, but hardly anyone would know this, thanks to the unfortunate coincidence of a subsequent prime minister with the same surname.

But the naming of Fraser long preceded the death of Malcolm Fraser, and regardless, there is no signage to set the record straight.

"The names of suburbs in Canberra are important, and they have been put in place for reasons," Ms Carnell said.

"So what is just unacceptable, really, is it's only the prime ministers who have got plaques up to explain why a particular suburb was named the way it was. The others, no one would know."

Mr Humphries said it was important for people to understand why suburbs and streets have the names they do.

"I'm a great believer in history guiding us into the future," he said.

"We study what's happened in the past, to tell us how we should behave and what we should expect in the future. So knowing about our history, knowing about the people that both built our city and built our country is really important."

Mr Stanhope pointed out that it was reasonable to create special signs for suburbs named for prime ministers, but why stop there?

"It seems to me like a clear oversight, and I think Gary, and Kate and I would acknowledge that we're probably sorry we didn't think of it," he said. "Now that it's been raised, I can't think of a single reason or argument against proceeding and appropriately signposting every suburb in Canberra."

An ACT government spokesman said while it was easy to find out about ACT suburb names online, the proposal to install signs in every suburbs was "worth considering".

Davidson knew Davis 'rumours' earlier

Jasper Lindell

GREENS minister Emma Davidson was aware of "rumours" circulating about Johnathan Davis' behaviour a week before party leader Shane Rattenbury was informed and commissioned an internal investigation.

Ms Davidson said a staff member brought information about Mr Davis' conduct to the party through her, and she defended a decision not to immediately refer the matter to police.

"In order to be able to make referrals to other authorities, we needed to better understand the nature of the information that had come to our attention," Ms Davidson said on Monday.

Ms Davidson said she first received information a "few steps removed" from a then 17 year old who has detailed allegations relating to a relationship with Mr Davis.

"I had no involvement in the investigation, or gathering of information," she said in a later statement, which said she supported staff in taking the allegations to the party's executive chief of staff "without delay".

Mr Rattenbury said he fully supported Ms Davidson's approach in taking the report seriously and treating it "with the respect and care that it deserved".

The Greens on Monday released an internal report that was handed to Mr Rattenbury on Friday, outlining the timeline of the party's handling of the allegations. The handling has been criticised by ACT Labor and the Canberra Liberals.

The report concluded Mr Davis had "undertaken activity which may be considered unethical and inappropriate, which does not align with community expectations and is likely to bring himself and the ACT Greens into disrepute".

The report, written by Mr

Rattenbury's chief of staff, said Ms Davidson texted him on Sunday, October 29 to alert him to a "serious issue" she needed to discuss the following morning.

On Monday, October 30 at 8am, Ms Davidson and two other members of staff informed Mr Rattenbury's chief of staff there were "rumours circulating about Mr Davis engaging in inappropriate behaviour with younger people, and that it was possible that some of those people might be between 15 and 17".

"At this point, those rumours could not be substantiated and there were no individuals coming forward with any specific information," the report said.

On Monday, November 6, Ms Davidson, Mr Davis and Mr Rattenbury's chief of staff met to discuss the accusation and inform Mr Davis he needed to share the accusation with Mr Rattenbury.

Mr Rattenbury commissioned an internal review on Tuesday, November 7 "to establish the facts of what we know, rather than to decide on a course of action for Mr Davis".

It was later that day, the report said, the party first received any evidence of a specific complaint about Mr

Davis' behaviour. The chief of staff met with a young person who detailed his relationship with Mr Davis, and later provided the party with material that showed evidence of their relationship.

The chief of staff wrote he was unclear whether illegal conduct had occurred and as a result felt obliged to report the information to police. This report was made at 10am on Friday, November 10, the chief of staff said, adding: "ACT Policing assured me that they would in the first instance talk to the person making the accusations and seek their advice on how they wished to proceed."

Labor lashes ACT Greens' handling of allegations

Jasper Lindell

DEPUTY Chief Minister Yvette Berry has criticised the Greens' handling of allegations Johnathan Davis had sex with a minor and an inappropriate relationship with a teenager, adding it was troubling complainants had felt the need to go public.

Ms Berry said there was frustration in the community and among ACT Labor members on how the serious allegations had been handled this week. Mr Davis' position had clearly become untenable, she said.

"Canberrans need confidence that allegations of this nature, no matter the profile of the people involved, will be handled sensitively. There are many questions that I have, that the ACT Labor caucus has, and that the community will likely have on how this episode was handled by the ACT Greens throughout the past week," Ms Berry said in a statement on Sunday night.

A lawyer for Mr Davis confirmed, late on Sunday night, Mr Davis had written to Speaker Joy Burch to formally resign from the Assembly and had separately written to the Greens to quit his party membership.

Ms Berry said it was troubling individuals involved felt it necessary to go public with their experiences to get action.

"I'm sorry that they have had to go through this ordeal in such a public way," she said.

Ms Berry, who is acting Chief Minister, said it was right police had been told.

Davis was 'unethical, inappropriate': review

The referral was a requirement of the Assembly's child safety code of conduct and policy.

Mr Rattenbury was unable to say whether the party had referred the complaint to the speaker and took the question on notice.

Complaints about members of the Assembly must be referred to the Speaker under the policy, which also says members will not "be alone with a child or young person unnecessarily" or "arrange personal contact, including online contact, with a child or young person for a purpose unrelated to official activities".

Potential criminal conduct must be referred to the police, the policy, adopted in September 2022, said.

A young person, now aged 18, has alleged he and Mr Davis had a sexual relationship and had extensive conversations on a dating app, where Mr Davis allegedly solicited intimate photographs. Mr Davis, through a lawyer, has declined to comment on the allegations.

Mr Rattenbury on Monday said the Greens were aware of the claim of sharing intimate images, which, if proved, would be a breach of Commonwealth law.

Ms Burch said she would be seeking information to determine what action she would take, and is considering whether an investigation is required to consider the serious allegations made against Mr Davis.

The Greens released an internal party review into the allegations made against Mr Davis, which was handed to Mr Rattenbury on Friday and concluded Mr Davis had undertaken "unethical and inappropriate" conduct.

The conduct "did not align with community expectations, and is likely to bring himself and the ACT Greens into disrepute".

Mr Rattenbury also revealed the party had counselled Mr Davis a "couple of years ago" for having a relationship that was "not acceptable" with a staff member who worked at the Legislative Assembly.

Mr Davis, by resigning, had clearly understood the seriousness of these matters, Mr Rattenbury said, but later added Mr Davis had told him he believed he had done nothing illegal.

In defending the party's handling of the complaint, Mr Rattenbury said he had been dismayed by Ms Berry's statement released on Sunday night, which said the Labor caucus had unanswered questions over the incident.

"Every single member of Labor caucus has my telephone number and my email address. Not one of them contacted me," Mr Rattenbury said.

The Greens leader said the party would reflect on its handling of the allegations but said he thought it had got to police "in a reasonably short time".

Mr Rattenbury said the Greens did not know the identity of a 15 year old who Mr Davis is alleged to have had sex with.

TRANSPORT Halls of power add extra charge to People's House

Parliament to be EV charging polestar

Karen Barlow

ELECTRIC vehicle charging is now under way in the public underground car park at Parliament House, in a first for the National Triangle and setting the People's House as the largest EV charging station in Canberra.

Parliament's presiding officers, the Speaker of the House of Representatives Milton Dick and Senate President Sue Lines on Monday symbolically did the "first charge" with one of 10 public EV chargers, out of an eventual 58 in the building. They are sited in the upper section of the car park close to main building's entrance.

There will be a charge to use the 7kW and 22kW chargers which will be available on the Exploren public charging network. Two of the chargers have been reserved for EV with accessible requirements. Parliamentary officials have also outlined that the remaining 48 EV chargers are expected to be installed in the Ministerial, Senate and House of Representatives car parks in the coming months.

The presiding officers have, as a "big priority", an aim to make the Australian Parliament one of the greenest and cleanest in the world.

"It's important that the Parliament leads by example, whether that be reducing our waste, whether that be using energy-efficient lighting, whether it be using all the technologies that we have," Mr Dick told reporters.

"This is just one part of making the Parliament of Australia, the cleanest and greenest it can be.

"It's a big priority for me as Speaker and the President. But I would like to see that we are leading by example. From little things, big things grow.

"And I'm hopeful here that the example of Parliament House will be an example for other Parliament's across Australia, businesses and community as well."

Following through on leading by example, Mr Dick said he does not have an EV but told ACM, publisher of this masthead, he was "looking at the options very closely now that we've got all of this new technology here at Parliament House".

Senator Lines revealed she signed up for an MG EV three years ago.

"I'm now on my second MG so I want to create that second-hand market to make EVs even more accessible and I have a Kona in Western Australia which I'm very happy with. Sorry, Tesla!" she said, to laughs.

The Parliament House charging project has been undertaken in partnership with local energy provider ActewAGL. The ACT government has a target of achieving at least 180 public chargers online by 2025. More than 100 have already been installed in the ACT and ActewAGL is contracted to install a further 100 across the next 12 months.

Parliament House is one of the most visited buildings in Australia with more than 800,000 annual visitors, while the ACT has become a national leader in electric vehicle take-up.

Low income renters priced out of ACT

Natalie Vikhrov

CANBERRA has become the second most affordable capital for renters in an average income household, but pensioners and those on JobSeeker payments are among the many "priced out" of the market, according to a new report.

The annually released National Shelter-SGS Economics and Planning Rental Affordability Index found that median rents have dipped slightly in the ACT over the past year but it is largely the worsening rental market in other cities that has placed Canberra near top of the leaderboard.

The result is an improvement on last year, when rental affordability in the ACT fell to the lowest level since 2013 and jurisdiction was rated among the worst for renters.

But while the report describes Canberra as being "on the border of acceptable affordability", it's only outer suburbs near Tuggeranong and Gungahlin that have "returned to acceptable levels of rent" and that's for households with a gross annual income of $126,248 - the highest in the country.

Suburbs in central Canberra are "moderately unaffordable" even for the median income household.

The rental situation is much more dire for low income households - including students in share housing and pensioners - for whom every suburb in Canberra is unaffordable to extremely unaffordable.

A spend of 30 to 38 per cent of income on rent is considered unaffordable, while 38 to 60 per cent is classified as severely unaffordable and anything above 60 per cent is extremely unaffordable.

National Shelter chief executive Emma Greenhalgh said for low-income households this means having to make difficult decisions around essential expenditure, which could include spending less on food or foregoing heating and cooling.

She said some households might also look to moving somewhere more affordable, which means potentially moving away from family, friends and their support network.

"That has a really significant impact," she said.

The report found that a single pensioner on $36,691 would spend 67 per cent of their total income to rent a one-bedroom dwelling in the ACT.

Meanwhile, a single person on a JobSeeker payment, earning just over $22,000 would have to spend more than their entire annual income to rent a one-bedroom in the ACT.

It comes amid a drop in social and affordable housing stock, compared to a decade ago.

Ms Greenhalgh said investment in social and affordable housing, including through the Housing Australia Future Fund, were a welcome move but "enhancements" to Commonwealth rental systems were also much needed.

May's Federal Budget included a 15 per cent boost to maximum rates of Commonwealth rent assistance for more than a million Australians.

The increase was the largest in decades but Ms Greenhalgh said it was still not "keeping pace with the way that rents are increasing".

She also pointed to the ACT laws that limit rent rises to 10 per cent above the consumer price index as among models that needed to be replicated nationally.

"We would [also] particularly like to see some meaningful tax reform around capital gains, tax discounts and negative gearing," she said.

Optus reveals cause of network outage

OPTUS is blaming a software upgrade for an outage that left millions without phone connections and internet services.

A 12-hour outage on Wednesday left 10 million individuals and businesses unable to make or receive calls, or complete transactions. The company said in a statement on Monday the cause was now known and steps had been taken to ensure it won't happen again.

"At around 4.05am Wednesday morning, the Optus network received changes to routing information from an international peering network following a routine software upgrade," the company said.

"These routing information changes propagated through multiple layers in our network and exceeded preset safety levels on key routers which could not handle these. This resulted in those routers disconnecting from the Optus IP Core network to protect themselves."

The time taken to restore the system was longer than anticipated as some of the routers needed to be physically rebooted, requiring Optus staff to be deployed across a number of sites across the country.

"The restoration of the network was at all times our priority and we subsequently established the cause working together with our partners," the telco said. "We have made changes to the network to address this issue so that it cannot occur again." Optus will co-operate with reviews launched by the government and the Senate.

'Do better on pay': more strikes over APS offer

Karen Barlow

THE main public sector union is attempting to pull the Albanese government back to the bargaining table over the APS-wide pay negotiations, announcing early morning strike action on Tuesday for the two agencies that stopped work earlier this month.

Community and Public Sector Union has advised that members in the Fair Work Ombudsman and the Department of Employment and Workplace Relations plan to stop work for two hours from 8.30am over the government's pay

There is a clear and simple fix here.

Melissa Donnelly

deal of 11.2 per cent over three years.

It follows the one-hour strike by members at the ombudsman and DEWR on November 2 and two rounds of one-hour strikes last week by meat inspectors and on-plant veterinarians in the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry.

CPSU national secretary

Melissa Donnelly said APS employees are happy with the government's offer on conditions, but it needs to "do better" on pay.

"There is a clear and simple fix here," she said in a statement. "The CPSU wants to see a package on the table that APS employees can proudly get behind, and we believe the government wants that too."

"The conditions package that has been negotiated contains industry-leading working from home rights, an increase to casual loading, significant improvements to paid parental leave and enhanced job security provisions.

"But APS employees want to see the government do better on pay."

Members in the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission on Monday returned a ballot in support of protected industrial action over the pay offer.

The majority of the 171 people who voted indicated support for strikes up to 1 hour, up to 24 hours and bans on working overtime.

Minister for the Public Service Katy Gallagher has insisted there is no new revised offer in the works.

"They've said no to us once. We came back. We revised the offer. We've improved the conditions. We've employed more staff. We've done a lot in the last 18 months. So I think we're probably close, but we haven't got there yet," the senator said earlier this month.

"We want to be a model employer. We want to work with the unions, but ultimately, we want to give our staff a pay rise. And some of those staff are potentially getting pay raises between 20 and 30 per cent."

The Canberra Times sought fresh comment from the minister but did not hear back before print deadline.

Crossbench cracks down on political integrity

Justine Landis-Hanley

SWEEPING reforms could force politicians and lobbyists to publicly declare their meetings and bar senior government advisers from working as lobbyists for three years, as the crossbench moves to crack down on the industry.

Integrity was on the agenda for the first day of sitting week, with members of the crossbench attempting to shine a light on lobbyists, pork-barrelling, and the treatment of whistleblowers.

Independent MP Monique Ryan kicked off Monday by introducing legislation into the House of Representatives that, if passed, would force ministers to release their diaries, and create a more comprehensive publicly searchable lobbyist register.

The announcement came off the heels of a report by The Australian Financial Review that gambling executives took Communications Minister Michelle Rowland to lunch on her birthday last year in the private dining room at Melbourne's Society Restaurant - a move Dr Ryan said did not pass "the sniff test".

The proposed changes - which Dr Ryan said so far only have broad crossbench and Greens support - would also bar ministers and senior government advisers from being able to take up lucrative private sector jobs lobbying or advising in their portfolios for three years.

Meanwhile, independent member for Indi Helen Haines moved a motion - seconded by the Liberal Party's Bridget Archer - calling on the government to introduce legislation reforming the administration of public grants.

Dr Haines wants to see grant guidelines and selection criteria made clear and publicly available, and require the government to report when grants are awarded contrary to advice given to the minister.

"Soon we'll be back into election mode. And we know that election mode is pork-barrelling season. It needs to stop, we need to put that in place," she said.

Greens spokesperson for justice David Shoebridge tried to suspend standing orders to move a motion relating to whistleblower David McBride, whose trial began in the ACT Supreme Court this week.

No more 'war on poor': Shorten

"Whilst ministers have to bear the ultimate responsibility for the robodebt scheme ... the way the former government treated the public service certainly led to failings within the administration of the public service itself," Senator Gallagher said.

Tabled more than four months after Commissioner Holmes handed down her 990-page findings on the scheme, the government's response does not shed light on investigations into individuals adversely named in the report.

The Public Service Commission has commenced inquiries into 16 individuals - including current and former APS employees, and former agency heads - following referrals from the royal commission. The Australian Federal Police in July said they received one report of a crime from the robodebt royal commission, while referrals were also made to the National Anti-Corruption Commission.

The debt-collecting scheme ran under the former Coalition government, from 2015 until 2019, when the Solicitor-General found it to be unlawful.

It automatically raised debts against social welfare recipients by comparing their reported income with averaged annual pay data from the Tax Office.

Recommendations implemented include improving training and record-keeping in the APS, a "customer service" focus within Services Australia and review of the structure of the social services portfolio.

The Public Service Commissioner will be empowered to make disciplinary declarations against former APS employees and former agency heads, requiring amendments to the Public Service Act.

Government Services Minister Bill Shorten said there had been 26 recommendations in his portfolio, with work already under way to move on a lot of the recommendations.

"Even in the last week, we've announced 3000 extra staff to make sure that we can process payments in a timely and accurate fashion," he said. "We've stopped using external debt collectors, which was a feature of the previous scheme under robodebt."

"We're improving our communications with people who use our system."

"Most importantly, under the Albanese government, we don't think that people who use our social security system are second-class Australians."

"We do not believe in a war on the poor."

But advocacy group, The Antipoverty Centre, called on the government to immediately cease debt collection.

"There is no humane way to extract money from people living in poverty who cannot afford the basics," the centre's spokesperson

Kristin O'Connell said in a statement.

Community and Public Sector union national secretary Melissa Donnelly said members would be "relieved to hear" the government's response to the royal commission but noted the seven areas agreed to only in principle.

"The CPSU will be working to ensure the intent of those recommendations are properly implemented, particularly regarding the need for more 'face to face' support for customers and increased social workers," she said in a statement.

"Our members in Services Australia are hopeful that this government is turning the ship around and I urge the Albanese government not to let them down."

Fine robodebt sentiments may not survive

ADRIAN ROLLINS

THE federal government says it is making changes to ensure something like robodebt never happens again.

Unfortunately, even if all the changes recommended by the royal commission are implemented, it could.

The government acknowledges as much in the fourth paragraph of its response to the commission's findings.

"The recommendations are not - in and of themselves - enough to prevent another robodebt scheme," the government admits.

As commissioner Catherine Holmes made clear in her report, this is because robodebt was, ultimately, the product of a political culture and environment that demonised those in need of government assistance.

The reforms recommended by the commission, which will help buttress the public service in assessing and administering programs and strengthening oversight and privacy protections and setting clearer guardrails around the use of automated processes and the like, are worthy.

And they sit within broader changes like the government's push to reform and strengthen the Australian Public Service, to rejig the ministerial code of conduct, replace the Administrative Appeals Tribunal, grant greater powers to the Commonwealth Ombudsman and reinstate the Administrative Review Council.

But one glaring area where the government's efforts so far are falling short is regarding whistleblower protections.

It is no small irony that on the very same day the government said in its response to the robodebt report that it was strengthening the system to protect public sector whistleblowers, the trial of military lawyer David McBride on charges of unlawfully leaking information about alleged war crimes by Australian defence personnel, commenced.

The prosecution sits awkwardly with the tribute four ministers, including Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus, paid to the "courage, leadership, and ethics on display from victims, advocates and whistleblowers" during the robodebt royal commission.

Ultimately, the question of whether or not something like robodebt happens again will come down to how willing politicians in future will be to refrain from attacking such people for cheap political advantage. When political battle is joined, principle can be an early casualty.

CANBERRA LIFE AS WE KNOW IT

Alice Garner loves going off on tangents

SOME people were never meant to do just one thing.

That's what Alice Garner tells herself every time she finds herself going off on one of life's many tangents.

An actor who appeared on Australian screens throughout the 1980s, 90s and early 2000s, she could very well have reached for the stars and shipped herself off to Hollywood, like so many other young Aussie actors.

But Garner chose a more ... obscure path. And that's Dr Garner to you - she completed her PhD in French history at around the same time she was appearing in SeaChange and The Secret Life of Us, and spent years weaving academia around acting.

She made her acting debut as a child in the 1982 film Monkey Grip, based on the novel by her own mother, Helen Garner.

At a certain point, she says, she grew weary of being at the whims of an industry notorious for uncertainty, disappointment and lots and lots of waiting. Acting, that is, not academia, although it has its own drawbacks.

"I reached a point, I think, in my 30s, where I was sick of the thing that comes with acting, of being constantly waiting for other people's decisions, and feeling quite powerless in many ways," she says.

"And I thought, you know what? I'm over this, and I wasn't really willing to go all out and sleep on couches in LA."

We're speaking over tea at the National Library of Australia, where Dr Garner the academic has fetched up on a fellowship.

She's researching the life of Mavis Robertson, best known for her pioneering role in compulsory superannuation and for co-founding the Mother's Day Classic fun run.

Having discovered the satisfaction of recording people's whole-of-life oral histories as part of a previous project, Garner is now exploring how to tell someone's life story as an audio documentary.

"People are actually starting to realise now the potential of superannuation, not only at a personal level, but at a societal level," she says.

"It wasn't the super itself that particularly interested me, because I'm not really a financially-minded person. But I got curious when I learned that back in the 50s, she was actually a longtime member of the Communist Party and she had, as a young woman in her 20s, taken groups of Australians through China and through the Soviet Union, Trans-Siberian Railway to these big world peace festivals and things like this.

"Also she was behind the scenes ... in the Vietnam moratorium planning, in Palm Sunday rallies, a whole bunch of peace activism moments and campaigns. And I thought, that's a life that lends itself to this sort of treatment where you get an individual story, but it takes you into important moments in Australian history."

You get an individual story, but it takes you into important moments in Australian history.

Alice Garner

Garner's own interests have never lent themselves to a life in solid academia. After completing her doctorate, she thought she might do a project on the history of hitch-hiking, and the shifting perspectives of the practice over time.

But when she went to apply for research funding, it was made clear to her that she needed to stick as closely as possible to her own track record. Her thesis had focused on perceptions of the beach and ocean in a French fishing village.

She'd already decided she was too attached to Melbourne and family to be able to focus more fully on French history. But that experience then led her, tangentially, to co-author a history of the Fulbright exchange between Australia and the US in 2018.

"I recorded a whole lot of whole-of-life interviews with Fulbright scholars - they're all in the [National Library] collection now."

It was also, in a sense, the seed of her current project on Mavis Robertson. She was always wistful that the life stories she'd recorded were only ever mined for snippets here and there. "You just couldn't do them justice in any form," she says.

She's also played the cello since she was 10, is part of a trio called Sunshine Tip, and used her time in lockdown in Melbourne to teach herself audio engineering. In this project, all her interests are finding a way to coalesce into something entirely different - the way she's always done it.

■ Alice Garner will be speaking about her research at the NLA, November 23 at 12.30pm. nla.gov.au

NOWHERE TO RUN Fighting rages near main Gaza hospital, 20,000 people trapped

Israel ignores pleas for cease-fire

Khan Younis

HEALTH officials and people trapped inside Gaza's largest hospital have rejected Israel's claims that it is helping babies and others evacuate, saying fighting continues just outside the facility where incubators lie idle with no electricity and critical supplies are running out.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has dismissed urgent calls for a cease-fire unless it includes the release of the 240 hostages captured by Hamas in the October 7 rampage that triggered the war.

A day after Netanyahu said Israel was bringing its "full force" with the aim of ending Hamas' 16-year rule in Gaza, residents reported heavy airstrikes and shelling, including around the Al-Shifa Hospital. Israel, without providing evidence, has accused Hamas of concealing a command post inside and under the health compound, allegations denied by Hamas and hospital staff. "They are outside, not far from the gates," said Ahmed al-Boursh, a resident sheltering there.

The hospital's last generator ran out of fuel on Saturday, leading to the deaths of three premature babies and four other patients, according to the Health Ministry. It says another 36 babies are at risk of dying. Israel's military asserts it placed 300 litres of fuel near Al-Shifa overnight for an emergency generator powering incubators for premature babies and co-ordinated the delivery with hospital officials. But the military said Hamas prevented the hospital from receiving the fuel.

A Health Ministry spokesman, Ashraf al-Qidra, disputed the account and International action is needed now to secure an immediate humanitarian cease-fire.

United Nations statement

also said the fuel would not be enough to operate the generator for an hour. "This is a mockery towards the patients and children," Al-Qidra said. Speaking to CNN, Netanyahu asserted that "100 or so" people had been evacuated from Al-Shifa and that Israel had created safe corridors. But Health Ministry undersecretary Munir al-Boursh said Israeli snipers had been deployed around Al-Shifa, firing at any movement.

The Israeli military said troops would assist in moving babies on Sunday. But Medical Aid for Palestinians, a UK-based charity that has supported Al-Shifa's neonatal intensive care unit, said transferring critically ill infants was complex. "With ambulances unable to reach the hospital ... and no hospital with capacity to receive them, there is no indication of how this can be done safely," CEO Melanie Ward said. The only option was for Israel to stop its assault and allow fuel into the hospital.

The Health Ministry says there are 1500 patients at Al-Shifa, along with 1500 medical personnel and between 15,000 and 20,000 people seeking shelter. The president of Doctors Without Borders International, Christos Christou, told reporters it would take weeks to evacuate the patients. World Health Organisation Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said on the X social media platform that Al-Shifa had been without water for three days and "is not functioning as a hospital anymore".

The Palestinian Red Crescent rescue service said another Gaza City hospital, Al-Quds, was also "no longer operational" because it was out of fuel with 6000 people trapped there. Gaza's sole power plant shut down a month ago, and Israel has barred fuel imports to prevent Hamas from using them.

One woman fleeing northern Gaza, Fedaa Shangan, said she'd had a cesarean section at Al-Quds and the "the wound is still fresh". She said the Israeli army near the hospital "did not care about the presence of patients, children, women and the elderly - they did not care about anyone".

International alarm is growing. "We do not want to see a firefight in a hospital where innocent people, people seeking medical care are caught in the crossfire," President Joe Biden's national security adviser, Jake Sullivan, said on Monday. "Decisive international action is needed now to secure an immediate humanitarian cease-fire" amid attacks on health care, the United Nations said.

About 2.3 million Palestinians remain in the besieged territory. Netanyahu says the responsibility for any harm to civilians lies with Hamas, accusing the group of using civilians as human shields.

Lebanon border tensions deepen

Jerusalem

ATTACKS by Lebanon's Hezbollah group have wounded seven Israeli troops and 10 other people, Israel's military and rescue services say. The clashes came as skirmishes between the Iran-backed group and Israeli military continue to intensify along the Lebanon-Israel border, threatening to escalate into another front in the Middle East's latest war.

The assault was the most serious incident involving civilians along the Lebanon-Israel border since an Israeli airstrike in south Lebanon on November 5 killed a woman and three children. The Israeli army's chief spokesman, Rear Admiral Daniel Hagari, said the Hezbollah attack on Israeli civilians was "very serious".

He said Israel was focused on its war in Gaza but it also remained at a "very high level of preparedness in the north" and ready to take further action.

The Israeli military "has operational plans to change the security status in the north", he told reporters. "The security status will not remain such that the civilians of the north do not feel safe returning to their homes."

The Israeli military said it identified 15 launches from Lebanon within an hour and its defence systems intercepted four of them. The rest fell into open areas.

Hamas' military wing, meanwhile, on Monday claimed responsibility for shelling in the northern Israeli city of Haifa and also the border towns of Na'ura and Shlomi from southern Lebanon without releasing any further details.

More than 180,000 rally across France against anti-Semitism

Paris

MORE than 180,000 people across France, including 100,000 in Paris, have marched peacefully to protest against rising anti-Semitism in the wake of Israel's ongoing war against Hamas in Gaza.

Prime Minister Elisabeth Borne, representatives of several parties on the left, conservatives and centrists of President Emmanuel Macron's party as well as far-right leader Marine Le Pen attended the march in the French capital amid tight security. Macron did not attend, but expressed his support for the protest and called on citizens to rise up against "the unbearable resurgence of unbridled anti-Semitism".

However, the leader of the far-left France Unbowed party, Jean-Luc Melenchon, stayed away from the march, saying last week on X, formerly Twitter, that the march would be a meeting of "friends of unconditional support for the massacre" in Gaza.

The interior ministry said at least 182,000 people marched in several French cities in response to the call launched by the leaders of the parliament's upper and lower houses.

Paris authorities deployed 3000 police troops along the route of the protest called by the leaders amid an alarming increase in anti-Jewish acts in France since the start of Israel's war against Hamas after its October 7 surprise attack on Israel.

In a letter addressed to the country on Sunday, Macron vowed that perpetrators would be prosecuted and punished. France has the largest Jewish population in Europe, but given its own World War II collaboration with the Nazis, anti-Semitic acts today open old scars.

Holding a French flag, Robert Fiel said marching against anti-Semitism was more than a duty. "It's a march against violence, against anti-Semitism, against all (political extremes) that are infiltrating society, to show that the silent majority does exist," the 67-year-old said.

Countries to thrash out global plastic treaty

Nairobi

AS THE world's nations enter another round of talks this week on creating a first-ever treaty to contain plastic pollution, officials are bracing for tough negotiations over whether to limit the amount of plastic being produced or just to focus on the management of waste.

Working with a document called a "zero draft" that lists possible policies and actions to consider, national delegates to the week-long meeting in Nairobi, Kenya, will be debating which of those options to include in what eventually will become a legally binding treaty by the end of 2024, officials involved in the negotiations say.

"We are at a pivotal moment in this process," said Andres Del Castillo, a senior attorney at the Centre for International Environmental Law, who is an observer to the negotiations.

The world is currently producing about 400 million metric tonnes of plastic waste every year, with less than 10 per cent of it being recycled, according to the UN Environment

Program, choking landfills and despoiling oceans. That amount is set to surge in the coming decade, as oil companies, which often also produce plastics, look to new sources of revenue amid the energy transition away from fossil fuels. About 98 per cent of single-use plastic - like bottles or packaging - is derived from fossil fuels, according to the UN Environment Program.

The European Union and dozens of countries, including Japan, Canada and Kenya, have called for a strong treaty with "binding provisions" for reducing the production and use of virgin plastic polymers derived from petrochemicals and for eliminating or restricting problematic plastics, such as PVC and others containing toxic ingredients.

That position is opposed by the plastic industry and by oil and petrochemical exporters like Saudi Arabia, who want to see plastic use continue. They argue that the treaty should focus on recycling and reusing plastics, sometimes referred to in the talks as "circularity" in the plastics supply.

In a submission ahead of this week's negotiations, Saudi Arabia said the root cause of plastic pollution was "inefficient management of waste".

The United States, which initially wanted a treaty comprised of national plans to control plastics, has revised its stance in recent months. It now argues that, while the treaty should still be based on national plans, those plans should reflect globally agreed goals to reduce plastic pollution that are "meaningful and feasible".

On Sunday, a group of 20 international scientists sent an open letter to negotiators asking them to put health at the heart of the talks, and aim for a treaty that reduces production volumes of plastics and mandates proper testing of all chemicals in plastics.

The world is currently producing about 400 million metric tonnes of plastic waste every year. Picture EPA

India's Diwali festival lights up the night, raising pollution alert

Lucknow

MILLIONS of Indians celebrating Diwali have lit up a Guinness World Record number of bright earthen oil lamps as concerns about air pollution soar across the country.

Throughout India, dazzling multi-coloured lights decked homes and streets as devotees celebrated the annual Hindu festival of light symbolising the victory of light over darkness.

But the spectacular and much-awaited massive lighting of the oil lamps took

The Indian state of Uttar Pradesh has set a record by lighting more than 2.2 million oil lamps. Picture AP place, as usual, at Saryu River, in Ayodhya, in Uttar Pradesh state, the birthplace of their most revered deity, the god Ram.

At dusk on Saturday, devotees lit over 2.22 million lamps and kept them burning for 45 minutes as Hindu religious hymns filled the air at the banks of the river, setting a new world record. Last year, over 1.5 million earthen lamps were lit.

After counting the lamps, Guinness Book of World Records representatives presented a record certificate to the state's top elected official Yogi Adityanath.

Diwali, a national holiday across India, is celebrated by socialising and exchanging gifts with family and friends.

Many light earthen oil lamps or candles, and fireworks are set off as part of the celebrations. In the evening, a special prayer is dedicated to the Hindu goddess Lakshmi, who is believed to bring luck and prosperity.

The festival came as worries about air quality in India are rising. A "hazardous" 400-500 level was recorded on the air quality index last week, more than 10 times the global safety threshold, which can cause acute and chronic bronchitis and asthma attacks.

But on Saturday, unexpected rain and a strong wind improved the levels to 220, according to the government-run Central Pollution Control Board. Air pollution levels were expected to soar again after the celebrations ended on Sunday night because of the fireworks used.

Last week, officials in New Delhi shut down primary schools and banned polluting vehicles and construction work in an attempt to reduce the worst haze and smog of the season, enveloping high-rise buildings.

Satellite launched to collect CO2 data

Montreal

CANADIAN emissions monitoring company GHGSat has launched a satellite aimed at detecting carbon dioxide emissions from individual facilities like coal plants and steel mills from space for the first time.

The satellite, named Vanguard, was launched from Vandenberg Space Force Base in California, GHGSat said.

Space-age technology is increasingly being used to hold polluting industries accountable for their contributions to climate change. GHGSat's data is available for sale to industrial emitters who want to reduce their emissions, as well as to governments and scientists.

Vanguard will build on the growing network of satellites that are already spotting plumes of methane, an invisible greenhouse gas that is difficult to detect because it tends to leak from an array of small sources including pipelines, drill sites and farms.

Carbon dioxide accounts for nearly 80 per cent of US greenhouse gas emissions from human activities and tends to enter the atmosphere from large industrial sources like power plants. Satellites monitoring carbon dioxide in the atmosphere currently were not focused on facility-level emissions, GHGSat said.

The data collected by Vanguard would help substantiate common practices of monitoring and measuring carbon dioxide emissions, according to Stephane Germain, CEO of Montreal-based GHGSat.

"Often what we find is a mix of direct measurements and estimates - therefore having a direct measurement of the entire facility from a satellite will act as a validation," Germain said.

Satellites have already shown that methane emissions are broadly higher than estimated and Germain said he suspected the same is true of carbon dioxide.

The information would help bolster the accuracy of government emissions inventories and scientific modelling, he said.

Titanic menu creates stir at London auction

London

MORE than 111 years after the sinking of the Titanic, memorabilia from the luxury liner has been auctioned off including a menu for first-class diners. The menu caused a particular stir; it is said to be the only surviving menu from April 11, 1912. It features oysters as well as "tournados of beef a la Victoria" and mallard duck.

The water-damaged menu sold under the hammer at the Henry Aldridge & Son auction house in London for 66,000 pounds ($127,000). A first-class blanket, which was presumably carried by a survivor in the lifeboat and had been estimated to be worth up to 100,000 pounds ($192,000), went for 76,000 pounds ($146,000).

The Titanic set sail on its maiden voyage to New York from Southampton, England, on April 10, 1912 with 2200 people on board. After just a few days, the luxury liner, considered unsinkable, struck an iceberg and sank, killing 1500 people.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A 'frank and fearless' public service

IT WOULD have been good if the government had accepted all of the robodebt royal commission's views.

It balked at the final "observation" of the commission that "confidentiality should only be maintained over any Cabinet documents or parts of Cabinet documents where it is reasonably justified for an identifiable public interest reason".

One of the lessons of the robodebt scandal is that openness improves government so it is regrettable that the Albanese government didn't go the whole way.

All the same, its acceptance of the bulk of the recommendations is welcome.

The scheme to send false tax bills to vulnerable people was a scandal in anybody's book. As the Minister for Public Service Katy Gallagher put it: "There's no doubt that the illegal robodebt scheme was a shameful chapter in public administration in Australia."

Quite.

There are broad lessons to be learned.

One of them is that public servants need to be able to challenge ministerial instructions which seem to them to be clearly wrong, and to do so without fear of harm to their careers.

There was, for example, clear evidence within the Department of Human Services that the automatic system behind robodebt

The Canberra Times

TO SERVE THE NATIONAL CITY
AND THROUGH IT THE NATION

Ministers with strong views need to be confronted by strong counter-arguments.

gave unjust calculations.

It determined welfare-recipients' liabilities not by what their actual incomes were but on some sort of computer-generated average.

The department knew that this meant false bills being generated - but nothing was done.

As the royal commission concluded about the now-departed head of the Department of Human Services: "When exposed to information that brought to light the illegality of income averaging, she did nothing of substance."

This particular issue brings into clear focus the central dilemma for the highest public servants.

Public servants are servants of the public - but they are also in a practical, day-to-day way the servants of the government elected by the public.

It is not the job of public servants to make government policy. It is the job of public servants to implement policy made by elected governments.

But what if that policy is illegal? Public servants cannot be expected to aid illegality. "I was just obeying orders" is not a defence.

The royal commission stated that senior leaders were "excessively responsive to government, undermining the concept of impartiality and frank and fearless advice".

In recent years, there seems to have been an unwelcome tendency by politicians to want public servants who are like-minded. Ministers have not seemed to want "frank and fearless advice" about their policies.

This development hasn't just happened in Australia but in Britain and the United States as well. It may be because of the rise of non-consensual, ideological politics. Ministers with absolute certainty do not want public servants conveying doubt and complexity.

To some extent, it is sensible for a minister to want senior civil servants with whom he or she can work easily. Like minds make for a smoother day.

But like minds may also make for worse policy. Ministers with strong views need to be confronted by strong counter-arguments.

The royal commission does not have specific recommendations on how to get "frank and fearless" public servants who are, nonetheless, constructive and helpful to ministers.

But we need to step back from this recent unhelpful, ideological climate where ministers expect public servants to be, in effect, part of their political team, sharing their ideology.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bringing our national failure to mind, to mourn and regret

IN THE Irish tradition of the Month's Mind, the bereaved bring the deceased to mind and mourn again. Tuesday is the Month's Mind for the death of the Voice. In rejecting it, Australia, deceived by a coterie of right-wing politicians, did itself a deep wound.

Perhaps we'll not fully know it, let alone feel it, for years. Perhaps, like much done to Aboriginal people, we'll never know, let alone feel it, and only our children and grandchildren will have the perspective to feel the inherited wound. A decisive 60 per cent rejection (8 million votes) across every state spreads responsibility in a remarkable coalition devoid of empathy.

Many Australians whose forebears endured massacre and dispossession in their own countries, voted "no". Many Australians with religious leanings, some raised in the teaching of the Good Samaritan, voted "no". Many Australians descended from migrants whose first generations were subjected to the White Australia policy and discrimination, voted "no". Most country Australians, otherwise known for their generosity, voted "no". Some younger Australians voted the future into "no". Most older Australians, who won't be there, voted no.

Yes, five million from the same cohorts had the heart and the hope to vote "yes". But history will record that even a powerless, but permanent, elected committee to advise how to close the gap for the most disadvantaged, was not acceptable if it was Aboriginal. The very ballot papers would have cried out against such a "no" had they a voice. Poor fellow my country.

P O'Keeffe, Hughes

No reason for no Voice

Now that the Voice to Parliament has been done and dusted and lost, there is no reason that there cannot still be a Voice advisory committee to Parliament. There are already a number of Indigenous federal politicians in Parliament.

As well as working for their electorate they could form an advisory committee along with some non-Indigenous members to form an advisory Voice to Parliament committee as was part of the referendum. As far as special recognition to the Indigenous community in the constitution, everyone in Australia is already recognised in that document and there should not be any community group singled out for special mentions, after all, we are all Australians.

Not all of Holt unhappy

Unlike W.A. Brown ("Dubious benefit for Holt", Letters, November 11), I welcome the news that traffic lights will be installed on Drake Brockman Drive, Holt. It is now difficult for motorists to safely join the Drake Brockman stream of traffic from Trickett and McNaughton Streets - due to the increase in traffic from Ginninderry. These two streets have not been "low traffic suburban streets" since the installation of calmers in Spoforth Street.

This situation will be much worse by the time the lights are in place and operating. The Strathnairn "punters" will be losers. They will be obliged to stop at the new lights to allow traffic from Holt and Higgins to safely join and leave the Drake Brockman stream.

And, currently, pity the poor pedestrian trying to reach the nature trail on the other (southern) side of Drake Brockman Drive. Sure there are traffic islands - narrow ones - but the pedestrians waiting on these islands are liable to be lifted off their feet in the draft created by the size and speed of Drake Brockman traffic.

Misguided 'land hoarding'

Land hoarding (often passed off as environmental correctness), and the land value rates revenue system, are largely responsible for today's lousy housing affordability and amenity.

The sustained supply of land for new, properly planned and serviced suburbs, satellite towns, etc, all government-driven and responsibly regulated, with more land sales direct to owner-occupiers; and the scrapping of the rates/land tax system in favour of say, a marginally higher GST, could ensure on-going housing affordability and liveability, across all areas - and a more responsible and progressive national economy.

Taking on the 'boys in blue'

Congratulations to Latrell and Jack and their legal teams for taking on the "boys in blue". Whilst Minister Gentleman has advised that an internal investigation has commenced, my sides are splitting from laughter - "police investigating police".

I have submitted a few complaints to the AFP Professional Standards regarding the conduct of AFP officers investigation into the death of my daughter in 2020.

The outcome was one of "nothing to see here"; the police allegedly complied with their Standard Operating Procedures (SOPS). Please note, I use the word "allegedly".

Oddly enough there is no conclusive evidence that I can find which confirms a crime scene was set up by the AFP officers who were assigned to the investigation of my daughter's death, despite being advised this was the case by a senior police officer.

And as far as evidence going missing, it was the same with my daughter's matter; much evidence "lost". Simply, it beggars belief, and integral in people losing faith in the conduct of AFP officers.

Old-fashioned scepticism needed

Mr Dutton's recent and repeated statements about off-shore wind turbines endangering whales and dolphins have been shown to be based on disinformation.

It has been reported that a Facebook post, stating that a paper supporting the "evidence" for harm to whales had been published in respected publication Marine Policy. As soon as the fake was flagged by Marine Policy staff, the Facebook page disappeared.

Research from InfluenceMap shows that "anti-climate groups are using Facebook's advertising platform and unique targeting abilities to spread disinformation, intentionally seeding doubt and confusion around the science of climate change."

It seems this divisive practice is being imported into Australia.

Used by right-wing groups to further their opposition to action on climate change, they undermine any chance of bipartisan decision-making. A bit of the Aussie scepticism and BS detection has never been more urgently needed.

The mis-and-disinformation appears to have reached the halls of Parliament and threatens to derail our transition to renewables.

Hypocrisy is breathtaking

There are those who support Israel's savage war against the Palestinians in Gaza arguing that Jews have a historic relationship to the land, Israeli national security demands the toughest military action, the people in border lands are being terrorised and civilian casualties in war are unfortunate, but are ultimately on the heads of the fanatical enemy.

Ironically, these are similar justifications used by Russia in relation to its war against Ukraine - just substitute Russia and Russians for Israel and Jews. Ultimately it's all about land, resources and security.

The US asserts the right to order the world under a "pax Americana", backed by its Western allies including Australia. The hypocrisy is breathtaking. We back the Ukrainians without understanding the Russians and back the Israelis without understanding the Palestinians, when in fact all parties have legitimate concerns.

It's time we grew up as a nation and stopped prostituting our body, soul and intellect for an illusory "security" based ultimately on plans to kill our neighbours.

David Perkins, Reid

Symbiotic relationship

Although one hesitates to applaud cartoons about what is going on in Gaza at the moment, the one by Broelman on Sunday is a pithy summary of at least one aspect of the conflict. The extremists on both sides have a strangely symbiotic relationship with each other in their mutual desire for conflict and dominance.

The vast majority of Israelis and Palestinians also have a symbiotic relationship that requires they live together as opposed to seeking each other's destruction. Let's hope the majority on both sides prevail over their extreme minorities.

Regions aren't ready

I have to take issue with the rave editorial (November 12) about Canberrans moving to the Snowy Valleys region. Despite best endeavours services such as healthcare will never be as good in the regions as they are in large cities. People moving to the regions put additional strain on infrastructure, so there is pressure to build more roads, etc, with strains on government budgets and the environment.

And with serious global heating coming does it make sense to live in more hazardous bush environments that requires responses from overstretched and struggling volunteer fire services and SES and greater taxpayer funded natural disaster recovery programs?

LEAVE RATES LEVER ALONE

The Reserve Bank can stop hiking mortgage interest rates in its quest to bring inflation down. Lower inflation will not happen until big business, supermarkets, energy providers, banks, insurers, all of them, cease with their unconscionable conduct, maintaining elevated prices for no good reason except greed, posting obscene record profits as people go without food or are homeless. If ACCC had any teeth and a will to use them, they would have stopped this a long time ago.

Hold on: this isn't the solution we needed

WUNDENBERG

IT WAS interesting to read that Services Australia are hiring 3000 more staff to attempt to resolve the long wait times on hold for clients, extended claim processing times and the administrative errors that have plagued clients trying to make ends week.

My first response was, "this is brilliant!" I thought having to set aside an entire day to call Centrelink because you don't know how long you'll be waiting for, if you'll be disconnected, if you find yourself handballed around for ages between department, or even if you will be able to get through at all, is just absolutely bonkers. We all know that Centrelink desperately needs to address these issues. But when I really thought about it, I started to worry. Is this the entire strategy? Are Services Australia throwing money at the problem ($228 million to be precise) and hoping it will go away?

Bill Shorten's office has said that Services Australia has fewer public servants per capita than at any other time, attributing the issue to the former Liberal government "gutting 3800 staff". While that's strictly true, unsurprisingly, it's not the whole story.

The pandemic has complicated matters, as the service need grew so significantly, required an inflation of staff for claim processing, customer service, ICT (maintenance and infrastructure), etc.

This led to a number of projects being instigated and staff numbers growing by just under 3000, and with 2000 non-APS staff transitioning to APS employment between September 2020 and September 2021.

Labor's 'contractor cull' included 1000 lost jobs (mostly in ICT) just before Christmas, as many structural systemic core system projects came to an end, and furthermore, in May of this year, it was announced that Services Australia would lose 1800 staff to "get back to normal" following the pandemic-era boost. I think there's a bigger issue at play than merely party politics. Last week, at the Senate estimates meeting, the staff satisfaction survey for Services Australia was discussed. It was revealed that up to 180 workers are leaving Services Australia every month, with almost 20 per cent of the remaining staff reporting that they plan to leave in the next year.

Furthermore, the deputy CEO of Services Australia, Jarrod Howard, admitted almost 20 per cent of the service delivery group did not recommend the agency as a good place to work. Howard explained the staff exodus as personnel retiring or chasing promotions in other agencies, and vastly oversold the current state of affairs in comparison to 2022, with a focus on cherry picking the highlights to discuss. Alarming, neither Howard, nor the other officials present at the hearing could provide any information on the spot regarding staff retention or morale strategies. Their response was limited to "sort of seeing" if there's any support they can give a team particularly under the pump, seemingly without any sense of organisation, policy underpinning or clear, repeatable and consistent plans for addressing these issues when they arise.

Now, add in an influx of 3000 new staff into this work environment. What could possibly go wrong?

Minister Bill Shorten stated that 800 Australians have already accepted jobs as part of that 3000 planned hiring frenzy; 800 new staff already being onboarded and poured into a workplace with deeper seated issues that seem to be swept under the carpet by the executive leadership team of the agency. Services Australia need to focus on fixing their workplace culture to resolve the revolving door of staff, or the percentage of lost employees is just going to rise with the influx of new personnel.

A review of staff feedback on Seek for Services Australia from across the country indicate a raft of solvable problems that could be addressed: micromanaging staff, undervaluing personnel, poor communication, and "[a]n atmosphere of toxic positivism" were all key issues reported.

Perhaps throwing 3000 more people at the issue isn't the right approach. Or at least not yet. Stop sweeping the issues under the carpet and cherry-picking the media talking-points - peoples lives literally depend on you getting this right.

Water will not flow forever if we continue business as usual

GLORIA
JONES

TEN years ago I travelled from our home in Clayton Bay, South Australia to Canberra with my late husband Henry Jones, where we cooked Coorong mullet for MPs to drive home the importance of reducing the amount of water being taken from the Murray.

Today, me and my daughter have come back to Canberra to replicate the action because the Murray-Darling is now in critical danger, and with new legislation before the Senate the next few weeks are crucial.

We know what my late husband Henry would say if he was still alive - the federal government needs to step up now and guarantee the future of Murray-Darling.

We are here to remind our politicians that those of us who have lived and worked on Australia's biggest river system for generations - including fishers, irrigators, First Nations and local communities - have a right to water from a sustainable Murray-Darling.

We know that a healthy sustainable river needs to come first and then healthy sustainable river communities will follow. We come to Canberra again because we know it's not too late to keep the Murray mouth open and the river levels high enough to run to the sea.

The droughts experienced over the past decade have had a devastating impact on our communities and tested our resilience, but we can't blame the droughts alone for the state of the Murray-Darling.

Unless we strengthen our efforts to reduce water taken from the river by getting behind government efforts to buy back water, then we will have gained nothing by the next time we experience a serious rainy season.

Both the droughts and climate change have no doubt made our task more difficult and urgent, but the core of the problem remains simple - river mismanagement in the form of too much water allocated to irrigators has devastated the long term health of the rivers.

We have seen an impasse in Murray-Darling water policy in which no single stakeholder will admit they are part of the problem - from high up the river in St George right down the Murray mouth.

The finger is always pointed upstream or downstream, but it is the overall river flows that are the loser.

We can't go on like this. Now it is time to make decisions for the good of the entire river system.

A healthy river environment means healthy industries can still thrive, but when the river is neglected as it has been, more fish species will be lost along with the pain that will continue to be felt in river communities.

As it stands, many species of fish, birds and plants have already been driven to extinction from the rivers and lakes around the Coorong where I live, and many will never recover. To keep on this trajectory is to do a gross disservice to future generations, including my grandkids.

One only has to look at what happened in the Menindee Lakes and the Darling-Baaka River with mass fish kills. We need greater protection and more water to be restored to these areas.

The same thing is now happening in the Coorong. After the recent large floods, black bream are now in their masses, but without regular flows - water for the environment - there is a grave risk these fish will die too. They cannot wait another three years.

We would be foolish to believe that our rivers will once again be pristine, but our communities have strong connections to rivers and wetlands so healthy cultural waters need to be protected. This also comes down to respecting traditional owners and acknowledging their wisdom shown in caring for these waterways.

We come to Canberra together with First Nations leaders and environmental groups calling for a true commitment to restoring a healthy Murray-Darling River system for all.

Climate change means we need to act quickly and become smarter with water use.

The Water Act must be fully adhered to and the plan being proposed for both the northern and southern basins to keep healthy flowing rivers needs to be delivered in full. The water currently on the table will not be enough to bring health back to our waterways, so any reduction of that would be disastrous.

Minister Tanya Plibersek, on behalf of Henry Jones and river communities stretching from the south to the north of the majestic Murray-Darling, we ask you to be brave.

Please, buy back the necessary water from willing sellers, sooner, rather than later.

What else is in the RBA toolbox?

When it comes to interest rates, we should be thinking outside the square.

CRISPIN HULL

THE other day a family member showed me his "man's shed" in his new house. It has a wall with silhouettes where the tools should be: chisels, fret saws, blade screwdrivers, a tomahawk and the like. I think there was a VCR and vinyl records as well.

It reminded me of the Reserve Bank - last century's tools, no longer fit for purpose for this century. Except the Reserve Bank has only one tool - interest rates.

We know it is not working. We must ask why. The answer is in two words: baby boomers.

The baby boomers - born in the years immediately after World War II - have, for 70 years - worked their way through the demographic graph like a goat swallowed whole by a greedy python.

Along the way they have cajoled and electorally frightened governments into policies that benefit them - from free university; cheap land; and subsidised mortgages in the 1970s; to superannuation concessions in the 1990s; investment concessions thereafter; and all the while generous senior's cards giving car rego, utilities and rates concessions to the well-heeled.

The boomers, now in their 70s, are still engaged and articulate enough to make politicians' lives a misery if those politicians attempt to take away any of these richly undeserved benefits.

The boomers have now left what superannuation funds call the accumulation stage. They are now selling their investment properties and drawing down on their savings.

For them higher interest rates increase their income, through bonds and interest-bearing deposits owned directly or through their funds. Or the increased rates are tax-deductible on investment houses and can be passed on through higher rent.

In this environment, about a third of the economy is unaffected by or benefits from higher rates - and therefore spend more and add to inflation. They spend more because they are used to privilege and having it good.

The other two-thirds are already squeezed to having virtually no discretionary spending left - one sausage with the mash instead two, perhaps.

The former group balances out the latter. Worse, on the fiscal or budgetary side the government is headed for deficits which also add to inflation.

In short, the interest-rate tool is not up to the task given to central banks in most democratic market-based economies - to keep inflation and unemployment down while ironing out the boom-bust cycles which have haunted market economies since the industrial revolution.

Central banks got that task and the independence that went with it because politicians could not trust themselves not to misuse the interest-rate tool to help themselves get elected rather than to manage the economy.

We naively believed that if we handed over one of the key levers of economic policy to a central bank we would sail smoothly.

RBA Governor Michelle Bullock needs to do some radical thinking around interest rates. Picture by Sitthixay Diththavong

Now to add to this baby-boomer glitch comes some research that suggests that not only are central banks incapable of smoothing out the booms-and-bust curve, but they actually make it worse.

Four European economists argue that central banks themselves cause "boom-bust dynamics" and financial crises by holding rates too low for too long, then lifting rates too far and too fast.

Their paper, Monetary Policy, Inflation and Crises: Evidence from History, trawls through 150 years of data from 17 developed countries. They conclude that central banks add to the boom-bust cycle and, worse, expose economies to financial crises - the very thing they were supposed to avoid.

They say, "Central banks have been raising interest rates to fight inflation just after a period when rates were first cut and then kept low. But these rate hikes substantially increase crisis risk, if rates were previously cut. Rate cuts lead to booms in credit and asset prices, and subsequent rate increases expose these financial vulnerabilities, potentially triggering a crisis."

Sound familiar? Remember the "recession we had to have"? Remember former Reserve Bank governor Philip Lowe telling us that interest rates would not rise until at least 2024 and the subsequent astronomic rise in housing prices?

Objectively, the subsequent 13 interest-rate rises in 2023 appear to be specifically aimed at driving Australia into a recession. But I don't think the Reserve is malicious - just oblivious to other forces at work.

Perhaps the only thing "saving" the Australian economy now is high immigration - but at vast cost to the Australian environment, lifestyle, and amenity of the (government budgets) must be used more responsibly and less politically. The inflationary and unfair Stage 3 tax cuts should go.

The great start on the clampdown on corporate tax-dodging should be ramped up further. And the investment concessions mainly used by Boomers should be tweaked away - not like Chris ("They Can Vote for Someone Else") Bowen before the 2019 election

And on interest rates we should think outside the square. If the aim is to dampen demand to avoid recession or boost it to avoid a bust, why not use a very direct tool that stares us in the face. We should have a variable GST rate. It would be as effective as a variable speed limit. Every month the Reserve would set the GST rate, rather than the interest rate.

Or the Reserve could have two interest rates: what you pay and what you get. Facing high inflation, the first goes up but the second does not. Facing a bust the first goes down and the second either goes up or stays flat.

In any event, surely, we can do better than continuing to use last century's tool kit.

ANZ joins the $7b earnings club

ANOTHER Big Four bank has reported a rise in full-year earnings to more than $7 billion but analysts are calling ANZ's profit disappointing and environmental groups warn its climate commitments are wanting.

Australia's most internationally focused retail bank on Monday posted a cash profit of $7.4 billion for fiscal 2023, up 14 per cent from the $6.5 billion it made in 2021/22, but slightly under consensus analyst expectations. ANZ's statutory net profit was flat at $7.1 billion.

"This is a strong annual result, with record revenue and cash profit following several years of transformation," chief executive Shayne Elliott said in a statement on Monday.

But E&P Capital analyst Azib Khan called the result a negative, with 2023/24 consensus downgrades likely.

There were concerns that ANZ's relatively aggressive growth in Australian home lending was pressuring its net interest margin, Mr Khan said, which was under expectations at 1.65 per cent.

But Mr Elliott said ANZ had strengthened its balance sheet and now had provisions for potential credit losses higher than prior to the COVID-19 pandemic.

(We're entering) a period of continued high interest rates, rising costs and geopolitical tensions.

ANZ chief executive Shayne Elliott

"This is critical as we enter a period of continued high interest rates, rising costs and geopolitical tensions."

Just 2000 of ANZ's one million mortgage customers were in hardship, a sign that most households were "muddling through pretty well", Mr Elliott said.

"In the scheme of things, it's relatively modest. And so that speaks to the strength of the economy, the fact that people have been able to work through."

The percentage of ANZ's Australian customers that are 90 days or more behind on their home loan or credit card payments had been ticking up this year but remained well below the levels seen before COVID-19.

Environmental groups were critical of ANZ's policy update on its climate commitments, saying they lagged those of the other three major banks in several respects, such as still allowing financing to coal, oil and gas companies via bonds.

Last week, National Australia Bank reported a net profit of $7.4 billion for fiscal 2023, while Westpac grew its net profit by 26 per cent to $7.2 billion.

ANZ announced a final dividend per share of 94 cents, 56 per cent franked, taking the bank's total payout for the year to $1.75 per share, up from $1.46 last year.

Alarming gaps in cyber security measures: ASIC report

THE confidential information of Australians could be at risk after a survey from the corporate regulator revealed many organisations had limited or no capability to adequately protect data.

The report from the Australian Securities and Investments Commission comes as the Albanese government weighs up new laws to deal with cyber security breaches.

Almost one in two survey respondents were not managing third-party or supply chain risk, even though these relationships could provide bad actors with easy access to an organisation's systems and networks. A third of organisations did not have a response plan for cyber incidents, and one in five had not adopted a cyber security standard.

ASIC chair Joe Longo called the survey findings alarming. "There is a need to go beyond security alone and build up resilience - meaning the ability to respond to and recover from an incident," he said on Monday. "It's not enough to have plans in place. They must be tested regularly - alongside ongoing reassessment of cyber security risks."

Many of the organisations that participated in the survey indicated a desire to improve, with 95 per cent opting to receive a report on how their cyber resilience compared to others.

The findings come as freight company DP World is dealing with a massive cyber attack that has closed four Australian port operations.

Home Affairs Minister Clare O'Neil is expected to introduce new laws to classify telecommunications providers as "critical infrastructure", forcing them to update their cyber security approach and meet minimum standards that apply to important Australian organisations like energy companies.

Aussie shares edge lower in wait for data

THE local sharemarket has finished lower on the first day of a busy week for economic data. The benchmark S&P/ASX200 index on Monday finished down 27.7 points, or 0.4 per cent, to 6948.8, while the broader All Ordinaries dropped 31.6 points, or 0.44 per cent, to 7145.0.

Traders will this week be watching closely for the release of US inflation data for October overnight on Tuesday, which CMC Market analyst Tina Teng noted could be critical for risk sentiment. "It could be a cheerful time for market bulls as consensus calls for a meaningful decline in US inflation," Ms Teng wrote.

Expectations are that inflation will fall to 3.3 per cent year-on-year, from 3.7 per cent in September. Domestically, the NAB business survey, third-quarter wage growth and October employment figures will be released this week.

TPG Telecom was the biggest loser on the ASX200 on Monday, falling 11.7 per cent to a five-month low of $4.81 after ending discussions with Vocus Group on a $6.3 billion sale of its non-mobile fibre assets.

"The proposed transaction involved considerable complexity and, ultimately, the parties have been unable to reach alignment on the operating model and commercial terms for TPG to have sufficient confidence that a successful transaction can be agreed and executed," TPG said.

The financial sector fell 0.5 per cent, with the Big Four banks mixed as ANZ posted a cash profit of $7.4 billion for fiscal 2023, up 14 per cent from 2021/22 but a touch under consensus expectations. ANZ shares closed down 3 per cent to $24.70, while NAB rose 1.6 per cent to $28.90, Westpac dipped 0.3 per cent to $20.80 and CBA was basically flat at $101.31.

In the heavyweight mining sector, BHP added 0.3 per cent to $45.40, while Rio Tinto and Fortescue both lost about a quarter of a percentage point, to $120.13 and $23.69, respectively.

Consumers in spend pause

HOUSEHOLD spending has simmered down in the absence of one-off events like the FIFA Women's World Cup, Barbenheimer and football finals. Payment data from the Commonwealth Bank reveals a sharp slowdown in spending in October after a spate of major events kept overall consumption elevated over the three months prior. The 1 per cent fall throughout October followed three months of improvements, with the annual pace of growth also falling back. Recreation as charted by the CommBank Household Spending Insights index - which captures roughly 30 per cent of consumer transactions - sunk 4.7 per cent over the month, with hospitality also recording a sharp 4.5 per cent decline. CBA chief economist Stephen Halmarick said higher interest rates were clearly weighing on households, as well as ballooning prices for essentials.

Sault Phillip Island, Victoria

Little penguins and little children may be the first things that spring to mind when you think of this island, just two hours south of the Melbourne CBD. But dig deeper and you'll realise it's a stunning spot for grown-ups, too, offering pristine beaches, scenic hikes and this chic three-bedroom hideaway. Accommodating six guests 13 years or older, Sault is decked out with all the creature comforts you can think of - from plush linen in the rooms to designer robes in the bathrooms. From $430 per night (minimum two nights); saulthillipisland.com

The Pole House, Victoria

You'll have to get your act together if you want to check into this holiday home. At press time, only a few nights were available here this side of Christmas. One look at its pictures and you'll know why. Not only does the Pole House - located near Lorne on the Great Ocean Road - offer sweeping views of the ocean, it's a staggering feat of architecture, too. Suspended 40 metres above Fairhaven Beach, it has only one room with space for just two adults. So save it for a special occasion. From $950 per night; greatoceanroadholidays.com.au

Take me there

Feel at home at one of Australia's most exquisite holiday houses. By Akash Arora

Somnium at Bingie, NSW

Take in the dramatic views of Mount Dromedary and Coila Lake from this sprawling property located on NSW's South Coast. Check into the Main House, which can accommodate up to nine guests in its four bedrooms, or for a larger group, take over the next-door Barn, too, where another six guests can sleep comfortably. From $2475 per night for the Main House (minimum three nights); somniumatbingie.com.au

The Headland at Dovecote, NSW

Set on 60 hectares of farmland near Gerringong, the Headland at Dovecote features a stunning design with its master suite and lounge cantilevered above ground, with wide-angle ocean views. There's a swimming pool on site, along with four bedrooms, a state-of-the-art kitchen and a rumpus room, meaning you wouldn't want to leave once you check in. From $2750 per night; dovecote.com.au/headland

Avalon Coastal Retreat, Tasmania

This three-bedroom hideaway is located so discreetly on the main thoroughfare of Rocky Hills that most tourist buses from Hobart on their way to Wineglass Bay would never know it's even there. But once you're inside the Avalon Coastal Retreat, the world will open in ways you can't even imagine. Natural light will pour in from every nook and cranny - from floor-to-ceiling windows, sliding glass doors and skylights - along with mesmerising water views. From $1050 per night; avalonretreats.com.au/coastal

The Dune House, SA

Both the New York Times and - more recently - Lonely Planet have ranked Kangaroo Island as one of the best places to visit in the world. Want to find out what the fuss is all about? Simply check into the three-bedroom Dune House, from where you can take in all the glorious aspects of this island - from dense eucalypt forests to pristine beaches. From $1200 per night; hamiltondune.com.au/Dune-House

Mount French Lodge, Queensland

Its owners call it the Scenic Rim's best-kept secret and we tend to agree. Not only is the eight-bedroom Mount French Lodge located on a sprawling private property with no neighbours, it's also often shrouded in clouds first thing in the morning, giving it that mysterious otherworldly feel. The clouds do peel away eventually, with panoramic views of the lush landscape taking centre stage. From $3200 per night; mountfrenchlodge.com.au

Serene Shores, WA

It's a longish flight to Perth, followed by a few hours on the road, but once you get to this four-bedroom haven in WA's world-famous Margaret River region, we bet you won't be complaining. Spend the day admiring Indian Ocean views from your private pool, hit the beach for crystal-clear waters and creamy sands or sign up for a tour of the region's best wineries. From $1999 per night (minimum three nights); privateproperties.com.au

SPORT RUGBY LEAGUE

Sharks fly into 2024 with 'easiest' fixtures of any club

Scott Bailey, Jasper Bruce

NRL chief executive Andrew Abdo insists the league's draw is as fair as it possibly can be after Cronulla emerged as the biggest winners out of the globetrotting 2024 schedule.

The NRL announced its fixtures on Monday, with South Sydney and Parramatta handed two of the toughest draws as they fight to return to the finals.

It came as the NRL heralded a new era for the game, with Manly and the Rabbits kicking off in a Las Vegas double-header on March 2 with close to 20,000 tickets already sold.

But it is the Sharks who should walk away from Monday the happiest, after bowing out of the first week of the finals this year.

Craig Fitzgibbon's boys in black and blue only have nine games against 2023's top-eight teams, the least of any club in the draw.

They also only play the Warriors twice out of last season's top four, while facing all of the bottom four from 2023 two times.

In contrast, Melbourne have suffered the toughest run.

Craig Bellamy's perfect round-one record will face its sternest test against Penrith on March 8.

And in what looms as potentially his last season, Bellamy's Storm cop all other teams from last season's top four twice and have 12 games against 2023 finalists.

'Wait and see' on 'club legends'

Melanie Dinjaski

THE Canberra Raiders are willing to be patient when it comes to veterans Jordan Rapana and Elliott Whitehead deciding their footy future beyond 2024.

Both players are on the final year of their NRL contracts with the Raiders next season.

With November 1 passing, the 34-year-old pair are among the 15 Raiders players now free to negotiate with other clubs for 2025.

Rapana and Whitehead may be tempted to get one more payday and extend with the Raiders before hanging up the boots, or they may decide to retire after next season, but for now the club are not feeling pressured to know the duo's plans.

"It could be both of their last year. It's a bit of a 'wait and see' situation," Canberra Raiders chief executive Don Furner told The Canberra Times.

"We'll give them the respect and the time that they need because they're both legends at this club."

Rapana and Whitehead are both set to notch their 200th game for the Raiders next season.

The former has scored 100 tries for the Green Machine, while Canberra's skipper has contributed 39 tries since arriving from England in 2016.

They've each battled their fair share of injuries in recent seasons, but with a changing of the guard in a youthful

Jordan Rapana is on the last year of his contract. Picture by Keegan Carroll Raiders squad, their experience could be invaluable for coach Ricky Stuart to ease the transition process.

"Talking to Rapa, he's just happy to get through year to year," Furner said.

"Rapa always checks his body, and then comes to me and says, 'Donnie I want to do one more year'. He's been great for us.

"He's never pushy about it. We'll talk to him throughout the year.

"Elliott, he might do another year. I don't know.

"But for those two guys, it is definitely nearing the end for them.

"They're professionals, and they've been very, very good for the young guys coming through."

Speaking in September to The Canberra Times, Whitehead was undecided on what he would do after the 2024 NRL season.

The second-rower said he may even see out the entire season before making a call on his future, but he emphatically denied any interest in returning to his homeland.

After calling the capital home for nearly a decade, Whitehead and his family are settled in Canberra and the England international is hoping to secure a job with the Raiders when he does retire from rugby league.

Recently retired Jarrod Croker is set to do just that next season, following his legendary career in green.

"Hopefully I'll get some type of job with the club," Whitehead said.

"I'd like to stay around Canberra. I've really settled in here and I've got no intention to go anywhere else.

"Since I've gotten to Canberra I've really loved it, and it's really grown on me."

If Rapana and Whitehead do announce that 2024 will be their last before retiring from rugby league, their final home game next season will be a must-watch for Canberra fans to show their gratitude.

After the NRL draw was revealed on Monday, that game could be in round 25 in a Saturday afternoon clash against the Penrith Panthers on August 24, unless the Raiders get a home final.

Seiffert, Kippax could host standalone NRLW

Melanie Dinjaski

THE Canberra Raiders' NRLW team could be set to host their standalone home games next year at Seiffert Oval or Belconnen Raiders.

The 2024 NRLW draw was revealed on Monday, and featured four Raiders games in the capital, including two double-headers with the NRL at Canberra Stadium in rounds three and five, and two standalone fixtures in rounds two and eight.

Raiders chief executive Don Furner said last season's standalone games at Bruce were a success, but they will keep an open mind about hosting them at a smaller venue next year.

"We're continually having discussions about that. We have spent a fair bit of money upgrading Belconnen Raiders - on the scoreboard, the changerooms and the dugout. So it could host," he said.

"It's only small - it hasn't got more [capacity] than 1000 probably. We could also go to Seiffert Oval.

"So we'll keep looking at that. But the last game that we had [at Canberra Stadium] as a standalone was fantastic.

"There were kids on the field, it was a big crowd and it was a good atmosphere."

Last season the Raiders fell heartbreakingly short of a finals debut with a final-round loss to the Titans at home. Despite the defeat, coach Darrin Borthwick was ecstatic with their performance in an inaugural season.

About half of the NRLW squad are understood to be on one-year contracts, meaning Borthwick will have a busy off-season re-signing or discovering new talent to add to the women's team.

"You have got time with that. They don't come in till late May, early June," Furner said. "So it'll be interesting to see who Darrin signs up, but he's working on it every day."

The Raiders women will begin their 2024 campaign against the Tigers in Campbelltown on July 28.

Weetangara Primary claims ACT title

Volleyball: Weetangara Primary School has cemented its place as the best volleyball school in the capital after beating Maribyrnong in the final of a junior competition on the weekend. After battling teams from more than 100 schools, Weetangara held on for a narrow win in the final of the Ozspike tournament. Now in its 10th year, the joint Ozspike and Volleyball ACT event organised by Olympian Rachel Uren has grown to provide a development pathway for the ACT Heat senior teams.

Officials scramble to lock in ALW venue

Soccer: Canberra United are still waiting to find out where they're playing this weekend as A-League officials scramble to lock in a venue after a game was moved away from Bathurst. Canberra were supposed to face the Western Sydney Wanderers at Carrington Park before officials deemed the pitch unsuitable due to "unseasonably cool conditions that have impacted the pitch's preparation". The Wanderers confirmed on November 3 the match would be moved to Sydney, but Canberra are still in the dark as to exactly where.

The Shak attack is back: Reilly elevated to Capitals' main roster

BASKETBALL

Caden Helmers

SHAKERA Reilly figured her WNBL days might have been over.

She was settled at home in the Hunter with a kelpie named Ziggy when Canberra Capitals coach Kristen Veal came calling about a development contract.

Now Reilly, who played for the Capitals during their 2019-20 championship-winning season, has been elevated to Canberra's main roster to fill the void left by season-ending injuries to Chloe Tugliach and Tahlia Tupaea.

"Initially I didn't really think I was going to end up back in this position again. I was shocked but so excited, very lucky," Reilly said.

"It was really cool when we first had our chat [about joining the main roster]. I was pretty shocked, because it has always been a goal of mine to get to that point. For Veal to have the trust in me to fill that position was really cool. It's been awesome. I've really missed it the last few years, it's really nice to get back into the groove and the professional side of things."

Reilly played under Paul Goriss during her stint in Canberra and the pair have linked up again with the title-winning mentor back on deck as an assistant to Veal this season.

Goriss says Reilly has returned to the Capitals a far more well-rounded player following NBL1 stints with Mount Gambier and Maitland.

Now Reilly has a big chance to prove it when the Capitals face the Sydney Flames at Sydney Olympic Park's Quaycentre on Wednesday, before flying to Townsville to face the Fire on Saturday.

"She knows this is a step in the right direction to cement a permanent spot in the Caps team in the future," Goriss said.

"I've just noticed her strength in what she has gained by going away and playing after her first season here with us.

"Playing in the NBL1 has given her more confidence and she has fitted seamlessly back into the Caps group.

"I've just seen her grow as a player, her skill level is better, her confidence better in what she does, and she looks at ease back on the court in the WNBL.

"She still needs to continue to learn the game, but you can just see her confidence in her shooting, she has taken it to another level [as well as] her confidence defensively, being able to defend in the WNBL.

"She has made great strides in being able to be a part of the current Caps group."

Fisher to work with next-gen

RUGBY UNION

FORMER ACT Brumbies coaching guru Laurie Fisher is set to turn his attention to a new generation of players after being added to the Australian under-20s staff for next year.

Fisher has been recruited by head coach Nathan Grey to work with rising stars who have been earmarked as future Wallabies. His role will be to assist at training and development camps ahead of the first camp in February.

Fisher retired from full-time coaching at the end of the 2023 Super Rugby campaign, ending almost 20 years in the Brumbies set up.

But he is already in Japan working as a consultant and will continue to take on various roles, with Rugby Australia keen to ensure his knowledge is passed down to coaches and players.

The Australian under-20s team will play in a Rugby Championship for the first time next year against the best juniors from New Zealand, South Africa and Argentina.

"We are excited with the talent that has emerged from this year's Super Rugby under-19s tournament, and we believe the players we have selected have the potential to make a significant impact on the international stage," Grey said. There were 18 Brumbies players picked in the preliminary 45-man squad.

Kerr's back on target for Chelsea after quiet start to season

SUPER LEAGUE

SAM Kerr has ended a quiet spell for Chelsea by getting back to her familiar prolific ways with a second goal of the Women's Super League season in their win at Everton.

With injury concerns and a trip back home for Olympic qualifiers having made it a largely unproductive start to the English campaign for the two-time Golden Boot winner, Kerr struck in deadly fashion to help the champions to a 3-0 stroll.

It proved a good day for Emma Hayes' side as they strengthened their position at the top of the league, with Manchester City surprisingly losing 1-0 at home to Brighton & Hove Albion.

Arsenal moved up to second, three points adrift of Chelsea, with a come-from-behind 6-2 win at Leicester City. Matildas star Caitlin Foord scored one, to make it

3-2, and assisted for another in a stunning second half after trailing 2-0 at the break.

Compatriots Steph Catley played a full game and Kyra Cooney-Cross was subbed out in the 90th minute on a successful outing for the visitors, while Courtney Nevill battled for the beaten Foxes.

Kerr has not been at her brilliant best yet for Chelsea this season, with her only goal for them in her first three matches having come against West Ham United, and she was rested last weekend after a trip back to Australia for the Matildas' Olympic qualifiers.

But the 30-year-old was back at her sharpest at Everton's Walton Hall Park home when she muscled ahead of the home defence to divert Johanna Rytting Kaneryd's sharp low cross from the right into the net just after the hour mark to put Chelsea two up.

AMBITIOUS Behich says Roos want to qualify for next World Cup in style

Socceroos 'are aiming for top spot'

SOCCEROOS

UNDER a weight of expectation, Aziz Behich has declared the Socceroos hell-bent on reaching the 2026 World Cup in style by topping their Asian qualifying groups.

An increased number of direct qualification spots from Asia - up from four to eight - leaves a greater margin for error in pursuit of a berth at the expanded 48-team tournament. But Behich doesn't want to see the Socceroos limp through the qualification phase, let alone rely on another inter-continental play-off.

Australia's qualifying campaign kicks off with matches against Bangladesh at AAMI Park on Thursday night and Palestine in Kuwait five days later.

"We want to top the group throughout the whole process, so that's our main goal," Behich said.

"We're not worried about how many teams qualify. We went through the play-off phase again last campaign and we don't want to do that again."

The Socceroos, ranked 27th in the world, are heavily favoured to top the second-round qualifying group against Palestine (96), Lebanon (104) and Bangladesh (183). The top two teams advance to the third round, from which they can qualify directly for the World Cup.

Against little-known opponents in the second round, Behich insisted the Socceroos' focus will be on their own performances in a return to competitive action after recent friendlies against New Zealand, England and Mexico.

"We're not looking for an underdog or a favourite or whatever," Behich said. "Internally, we know what we can produce on the pitch and what we expect from ourselves, and that's high standards."

"It's going to be no different if we (play against) a lower-ranked nation or a higher one. It's an international football game. We just want to get better every camp and every game."

Left-back Behich, who has rejoined Melbourne City

this season after a decade abroad, said the Socceroos will relish playing qualifiers on home soil.

It comes after a significant portion of the 2022 World Cup qualifying campaign was played in a hub after the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic.

"It was difficult for us, no home games pretty much, so we're excited that the first game's at home in front of our fans," Behich said.

ATLETICO SET WINS RECORD

Atletico Madrid have come from behind to defeat Villarreal 3-1 in Spain's La Liga and move within six points of surprise leaders Girona. It was a club-record 15th straight league home win for Atletico, surpassing the run of 14 victories in a row at the Vicente Calderon Stadium between May 2012 and February 2013. Atletico fell behind when Gerard Moreno scored in the 20th minute, but the hosts rallied with goals by Axel Witsel in first-half added time, Antoine Griezmann in the 80th and Samuel Lino in the 85th. It was the seventh goal in six matches for Griezmann who, along with Alvaro Morata, is leading an attack that has scored 29 goals in 12 league matches.

Atletico were coming off a 6-0 home rout of Celtic in the Champions League and are unbeaten in 12 games in all competitions, with 10 wins and two draws. Meanwhile, Polish ace Robert Lewandowski struck twice to lead Barcelona to a come-from-behind 2-1 win over Alaves, moving them to within four points of Girona.

Selectors preparing for life after Lanning

Scott Bailey

AUSTRALIA coach Shelley Nitschke admits a changing of the guard has hit her faster than expected, as officials hold off a decision on Meg Lanning's full-time successor.

Selectors will announce a squad for next month's multi-format tour of India today, less than a week after Lanning's shock retirement call. It's unlikely a captain will be named until closer to Australia's December 13 departure, with a decision still needing to be made and approved by the Cricket Australia board.

Alyssa Healy remains the front-runner, the 33-year-old having put her hand up for the job after leading Australia in Lanning's absence for parts of the past year. Tahlia McGrath is the other potential option if officials prefer a longer-term replacement, given the 28-year-old has served as Healy's deputy on recent tours.

"There's quite a few things to weigh up around it," Nitschke said.

"It's just a matter of going through the process. Sitting down with the selectors and people who make those decisions and working out what's the best thing moving forward."

Nitschke knew when she took over as coach last year she would oversee a significant period of transition in the all-conquering women's team. But that time has arrived after Lanning and her previous deputy Rachael Haynes retired in the space of 14 months following a five-year period of Australian dominance.

A shootout, a Comet and the GOAT: Canberra's PM's XI wish list for Albo

Prime Minister Anthony Albanese will have a say in who faces Pakistan at Manuka Oval. Picture by Keegan Carroll

Caden Helmers

WE WON'T sit here and tell Anthony Albanese how to run the country, so we won't tell him how to pick his Prime Minister's XI either.

"Obviously it's his game, he should have his fingerprints on selection," Cricket ACT chief executive Olivia Thornton grinned.

We just want to give him a few pointers about what Canberra cricket fans want to see when the Prime Minister's XI face Pakistan at Manuka Oval in a four-day game - which could double as a Test audition - from December 6.

THE SHOOTOUT

Is this Manuka Oval or the wild west?

What Thornton labels "one of the best stadiums in Australia" could host a shootout to determine David Warner's replacement at the top of the order for the Australian Test side this summer.

Warner has already scripted his own farewell - and a departure after January's SCG Test means selectors need to find a new opener for a series beginning 10 days later.

Cam Bancroft is the Sheffield Shield's leading run scorer with 458 at 76.33, while Matt Renshaw - who scored a century in last year's Prime Minister's XI fixture - has scored 300 at 42.85. Marcus Harris and Henry Hunt have also featured in discussions.

Run through last year's squad and you'll notice Renshaw, Peter Handscomb, Ashton Agar, Todd Murphy, and Michael Neser have all played Test cricket since. Skipper Josh Inglis is keeping for Australia at the World Cup, and Aaron Hardie made his international limited overs debut.

"It's a really important fixture for them to be able to put their best foot forward. It is a genuine audition this year and for years to come," Thornton said.

"We know that Warner is probably hanging up the boots at the end of this international summer, so for a young opener to come through the PM's XI and put their best foot forward in this fixture, what an opportunity.

"There are lots of people putting their hand up at the moment. Whoever does come to town, no doubt they'll be up and firing. If they play well and get runs on the board, who knows where that could land for them for the coming season."

'Boring' Crows desperate to rebound against Swans

AFLW

Steve Larkin

ADELAIDE stalwart Ebony Marinoff says her side was "boring" in their upset loss to Brisbane in an AFLW qualifying final.

The Crows slipped to a two-point defeat to the Lions which pitches the minor premiers into a sudden-death semi-final against Sydney this Saturday night.

"We're obviously bitterly disappointed," Marinoff told reporters on Monday.

"We certainly feel like it's a missed opportunity. But in saying that, we earned the right to have a double chance."

The Crows dominated key statistics against the Lions, with 11 more entries into their attacking 50 metre arc, 64 more disposals, and boasting the top-seven individual ball-winners on the ground.

But Marinoff said Adelaide's lack of daring ball use cost them victory.

"We probably weren't brave, we were just playing the game safe, and playing finals safe is not how it's going to be won," the five-time All Australian said.

"We need to be bold and brave and we'll look to rectify that come Saturday. It comes back to the way we move the footy - we were just being boring and going down the line.

"You got to change angles and break the Lions' defence.

"And when the game was on the line, they sent a few back and we had some spares back behind the ball - and we don't need to have spares at that point in time, we need to win the game."

Marinoff vowed the Crows would rapidly learn from their loss.

"It's actually a really good learning point for some of our younger girls," she said.

"We had a few girls playing their first or second final so hopefully they can learn from those moments, as can we all. It's good to be challenged in the first weekend of finals and have things to work on. As a group we're really hungry and we know we need to be at our best but ... it's so exciting for the competition to have these finals."

Jade Ellenger of the Lions is tackled by Ebony Marinoff in their AFLW qualifying final. Picture AAP

into the fold for the Prime Minister's XI, it's now. The Comets have just returned to the national second XI competition and return of a genuine pathway through Canberra has the region's best players salivating.

"In previous years, we've had an opportunity. Even the likes of their current coach, Jono Dean, he made his way through the PM's XI. I know those conversations are taking place with Stuart Karpinnen at the moment," Thornton said.

"Last year we had young Zac Keogh and Blake Faunce as 12th and 13th, and they are now both members of that Comets team. Having that connection through to our local Comets side is really important because it does provide them with a little bit of a carrot.

"Equally [they're in] the box seat in terms of [seeing] how those more senior players prepare for the games. We can't underestimate the importance of those connection points."

THE GOAT

Wishful thinking, but how about Nathan Lyon?

Australia's third leading Test wicket-taker of all time is just four shy of claiming 500 scalps and the off-spinner would attract plenty of interest from punters and pundits alike.

Lyon has returned for NSW after a calf injury derailed his Ashes campaign and another four-day game in Canberra would give him one final chance to dust off the cobwebs before the Test summer.

Oh, and have we mentioned he used to be a groundsman at Manuka Oval?

'Unplayable' Zampa has Aussies on cusp of a World Cup final

Ian Chadband

AUSTRALIA'S World Cup hunters have flourished and grown stronger during the group stages, with Adam Zampa ending the marathon nine-match programme as the tournament's leading wicket-taker and Glenn Maxwell its most devastating scorer.

The statistics after the five-week slog to get to this week's semi-finals demonstrate just how a handful of the key players in Pat Cummins' team have hit their most formidable form just at the right time going into Thursday's last-four clash with South Africa in Kolkata.

Among the batters, Virat Kohli's 50 in the final match against the Netherlands on Sunday put the Indian great at the top of the leading run-scorers, having amassed 594 runs. But there are three Australians in the top 11, with all the question marks hanging over David Warner dispelled by the 37-year-old accumulating 499 runs from his nine innings to be fifth top-scorer.

Mitchell Marsh's emotional hundred in their final match against Bangladesh gives him 426 from eight digs in seventh place, while Maxwell is 11th with 397 in seven innings.

But Maxwell, whose incredible unbeaten 201 not out against Afghanistan was the only double-century of the group stages, has the best strike-rate of any batter in the tournament, scoring his runs at 152.69.

Second in the list is Travis Head, who has been scoring at a rate of 144.44, while in the six-hitting list Maxwell's 22 maximums have only been bettered by India captain Rohit Sharma's 24. Nobody, though, scored runs in a single innings quicker than captain Cummins, whose 37 off 14 balls against New Zealand at Dharamsala came at the unfeasible rate of 264.28.

Zampa has been the tournament's standout tweaker, with his tournament-best haul of 22 wickets - at an average of 18.90 and with an economy rate of 5.26 - now four clear of any other bowler left in the last-four.

Daniel Vettori, Australia's spinners' coach, paid the 31-year-old Zampa a handsome tribute over the weekend, describing how he's become almost "unplayable".

Adam Zampa's form has fired Australia into the semi-finals. Picture AAP

It is all about the length of control for him ... all the other skills are there.

Daniel Vettori on Adam Zampa

"He obviously had a very difficult start through injuries and illness to be able to actually play, and probably the first three games was an amazing effort because he was pretty close to pulling out against Pakistan.," Kiwi Vettori said.

"His control of his length since has been the best I've seen.

"We all know the skills and the variations, but his ability to actually just land the ball on the spot time and time again gave most teams limited opportunities to attack him. It is all about the length of control for him, because all the other skills are there.

"But when you combine them with that aspect of his game as well, he's almost unplayable."

Parish believes McKay can be game-changer for Bombers

AFL

Oliver Caffrey

ESSENDON midfielder Darcy Parish is expecting to owe Ben McKay a "couple of beers" for the work the key recruit will perform in defence for the Bombers.

Parish met his new teammate for the first time on Monday as Essendon launched a new major co-partner, Dutton Automotive.

Free agent McKay was the headline acquisition of Essendon's productive trade period, alongside Jade Gresham (St Kilda), Xavier Duursma (Port Adelaide) and Todd Goldstein (North Melbourne).

The former North Melbourne defender is a towering presence, standing at 202 cm and weighing 104 kg.

"We've probably lacked someone of his size and calibre the last couple of years so he's going to fit straight into our backline along with so many good players we've got down there as well," Parish said of McKay.

"It's going to be great to see him intercepting balls. "He will probably help us out a fair bit. I'll owe him a couple beers at the end of next season."

McKay believes Essendon's defence can become a strength for them as he joins the likes of Jordan Ridley, Mason Redman and Jayden Laverde down back.

"I think the flexibility and the height down there can be something we can really use, and obviously Andy (McGrath) and those guys running off (half-back) as well," the 25-year-old said.

"It's a nice blend of height and running."

Essendon's first-to-four year players returned to training on Monday with coach Brad Scott's message at the end of last season still ringing in their ears.

After the Bombers' 2023 campaign faltered badly during the final eight weeks, Scott pleaded with the group to take "extraordinary measures" to compete with the best teams.

"There's a difference between training hard, and I think everyone trains hard, to what an AFL lifestyle looks like," Scott said after Essendon's round 24 thumping by premiers Collingwood.

"We need a bigger core group of leaders who can set the example."

A number of Bombers players embarked on a trip to Arizona for a high altitude training camp, at their own expense, during the off-season.

Asked if the Bombers had taken notice of Scott's assessment, Parish said: "I bloody hope so."

"You'd want to come back in good nick, you get found out pretty quick if you don't," he said.

"If you're not ready, you're going to be playing a lot of catch up, and we're not waiting for anyone to catch up."

McKay was impressed by Scott's pitch and the club's determination to bridge the gap with the AFL's best.

Essendon will go into next season still searching for their first finals win since 2004.

"Their work ethic has been really strong," he said.

Raiders remember the Titan

RUGBY LEAGUE

Melanie Dinjaski

THE Canberra Raiders just can't quit David Fifita.

Reports of the Titans back-rower technically becoming a free agent on November 1 has opened the door for the Raiders to swoop in and make a play at signing the Queenslander once more.

Despite extending with the Titans for another three years in August, a contract clause could give Fifita until round 10 next season to decide if he will remain on the Gold Coast for 2025 or move elsewhere.

The clause is reportedly designed to give Fifita time to determine if he is comfortable working under new Titans coach Des Hasler, after Justin Holbrook's sacking.

Canberra were actively chasing Fifita before he extended with the Titans, and after recent developments they are set to throw their hat in the ring again.

"I'm sure Ricky [Stuart] will ring his agent," Raiders chief executive Don Furner told The Canberra Times. "You've got to have a real go at quality players. If they stay at their own club, it's not a loss really."

"He's got his best footy ahead of him, so we'll definitely be keeping a close eye on that one."

It all makes for an intriguing visit to the capital for Fifita and the Titans come round six, where speculation on his future will surely follow.

Fifita's agent declined to comment on specific clauses in the Origin star's contract, but said they had no plans to go back to the open market after twice fielding offers this year.

The Raiders' 2024 draw was released on Monday, revealing that Canberra's season will begin on March 7 in Newcastle.

Furner was pleased with the "well-rounded" draw, with "blockbuster games" at home against South Sydney, Parramatta, Penrith and the Roosters, and that the club's request for day-time games in winter when possible, was heard.

One new Raider that probably won't have a hard time adjusting to the Canberra cold is Englishman, Morgan Smithies.

Furner was able to divulge more details about how they managed to secure the services of the international Wigan forward on a three-year deal.

"We'd talked about him before, but Wigan weren't going to release him," Furner said. "Then he really pushed the point of getting a release, we paid the release fee and we got him out early. They don't always do that."

"The club possibly thought, well, he's won a grand final with us, we've won a grand final with him. So I think it helped us and a week or two after the grand final they wrote back and said yes."

The 22-year-old will arrive in Canberra in top form, fresh off winning the Super League grand final, and Furner is hoping he'll emulate the other English Raiders.

"If he's half as good as Elliott Whitehead has been for us, he'll be fantastic," Furner said.
